About the Land and Water Conservation Summit

The Rhode Island Land and Water Conservation Summit helps to build the capacity of the critically important grassroots organizations that focus on land and watershed conservation. Partnership programs foster learning and collaboration among conservation leaders throughout the state and region.

This event is attended by over 80 mostly volunteer land and water conservation groups, in addition to municipal, state, and federal agencies, colleges, other environmentally focused non-profits, foundations, and businesses. We believe that by working together, we can individually and collectively be more efficient and more effective in protecting our state's land and water resources.
